For those learning Photoshop, I would recommend this book by Scott Kelby, who was a teacher and founder of Scott's Heading on the Web: Photoshop for Photographers (Sling Media, 2009). You can get this book in electronic form through Scott's site at www.scottkelby.com. # PDF FILE TYPE In the following sections, you can find quick tips on working with PDF (portable document format) files, but for more about these and the gazillion other types of file types, check out this book's Table of Contents. ## Choosing a PDF Viewer I frequently use my iPad (and other mobile devices) as my primary device to view and edit images. Unfortunately, native iPad programs don't include viewers for PDF files. Fortunately, you can find many third-party applications that enable you to view PDF files on your iPad. Among the free options are * PDF Expert Pro (www.pdfactory.com) * PDF Expert Lite (www.pdflibrary.com) Also, check out these paid iPad options: * iPDF (www.itoken.com) * PDF Expert (www.peachpit.com) * RealDock (www.remobjects.com) As of this writing, the native iPad Reader on OS X doesn't contain a PDF reader. You can use Preview for that function. For free PDF readers on Windows, check out my favorite program, Adobe Reader. ## Working with PDF Files Like so many other file

The Adobe Photoshop Creative Cloud Adobe Photoshop is a traditional photo editing software that has gained a reputation of being the "photoshop of all photoshop". It is a multi-faceted powerful software. It includes tools like the colour picker, and blending modes that can be used to add artistic effects to your images. The powerhouse of Photoshop is filters, which you can apply to create various photographic effects. Photoshop supports up to 64 layers so you can place multiple instances of layers as needed. Adobe Photoshop Elements is an alternative to traditional Photoshop. It is a graphics editor for photographers, image editors and hobbyists. It contains most of the features of the professional version but with fewer features and a simpler user interface. Features of Adobe Photoshop Elements The following are the features of Adobe Photoshop Elements that make it an alternative to Photoshop. 1. It is a modern version of the one that is used by professionals Adobe Photoshop and Photoshop Elements are the same software with the same features but they have a different user interface. Photoshop's interface is relatively complex, meaning it has much more features than Photoshop Elements. However, Photoshop and Photoshop Elements have the same software architecture. The features that are available on Photoshop and Photoshop Elements are the same but the interface and the toolbars are different. For example, the pixel/dpi feature for scaling is a Photoshop feature but not in Photoshop Elements. Additionally, only the interface that is used by a professional like a photographer is available to Photoshop Elements. A wedding photographer for example would not use Photoshop Elements. Therefore, Photoshop Elements does not have all the features that Photoshop has. 2. It is a part of the Adobe Creative Cloud service You can use your Photoshop Elements account with the Adobe Creative Cloud service. This service includes other programs and services such as Adobe Lightroom, Adobe Photoshop and PhotoShop Touch. You can access your creative cloud account on any computer. Therefore, Photoshop Elements allows you to collaborate with other Adobe creative cloud members on photo editing services. Adobe Photoshop Elements is powered by your Creative Cloud account. Therefore, you are billed for using the software after each time you use it. You don't have to pay one time fee for using it. However, you are allowed to use Photoshop Elements without your creative cloud account. 3. It is available at no cost Adobe Photoshop Elements is available at no cost to purchase. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a coating apparatus for use in coating a substrate with a fluid or coating material. The substrate includes at least one surface and a coated surface formed on the substrate. 2. Description of Related Art The development of coating technologies enables the formation of several layers of material on the surface of an article. For example, a car body manufactured by a painting process can include layers of coating colors such as white, black, and red. Each layer typically includes a coating material such as a lacquer, a paint, and a sealant. Conventional coating technologies may be limited to applying only a single coating material layer on a substrate, while not being capable of applying more than one coating layer. Furthermore, the conventional coating technologies may be insufficient to form a surface having a desired pattern formed thereon. For example, it may be difficult to achieve coating having a desired pattern formed thereon by conventional coating technologies. U.S. patent application Ser. No. 10/733,894 filed on Dec. 6, 2003 and U.S. patent application Ser. No. 10/728,234 filed on Dec. 3, 2003 disclose examples of a coating apparatus for coating a substrate with a fluid. In the coating apparatus, a coating fluid is supplied from a coating fluid supply source to each of nozzles. At the same time, the supply source is temporarily stopped to suppress the fluctuation in pressure during a transient period. When the coating fluid supply is resumed, the supply of the coating fluid to the nozzles is temporarily stopped to suppress the fluctuation in pressure at the beginning of the supply of the coating fluid. Thus, the coating fluid is supplied to the nozzles in a predetermined time. However, the operation of stopping the supply of the coating fluid may cause a streaky pattern formed on the surface of an article to vary in time. In the case of the coating apparatus disclosed in the above two applications, the coating fluid is supplied to the nozzles in a predetermined period. Therefore, the total time during which the coating fluid is supplied to the nozzles is approximately equal to the supply period. Accordingly, the total time during which the coating fluid is supplied to the nozzles is insufficient to achieve a desired coating pattern. If the supply of the coating fluid is further prolonged so that the total time during which the coating fluid is supplied to the nozzles is approximately equal to the coating period, the total time during
