GURU FLASHPOINT AI game: GURU FLASHPOINT GURU FLASHPOINT is a major update for the GURU system of Rizelmine Games, and the official re-launch of the company. The company was re-launched in 2007 under the leadership of Tatsuya Kurahashi, who has been working as both an artist and programmer since 2001. Rizelmine Games' new product line includes games that are designed with the philosophy "Save the environment." That is why the latest project, GURU FLASHPOINT, is very different from other games in the company's portfolio. GURU FLASHPOINT is a real-time flash game that involves a computer-controlled character that can be controlled by players via a computer connection. For example, although GURU is one character, the actions and movement of the game are all handled by the computer. Players control actions that are put into the game by the system. Therefore, if the enemies of the game fall into a puddle of water, players can step into that puddle to get out of the water. GURU FLASHPOINT has a variety of features, including both positive and negative achievements. The existence of negative achievements means that players can maintain a balance of positive and negative achievements when playing. When playing, players can realize the sincere playability of the game by continuously playing and experiencing its "fluidity." GURU FLASHPOINT features a new character and new game design on top of the original GURU system. The system, which provides a theme to accompany the character, can provide a completely new experience in a game. Rizelmine Games was created in 1999 as the art team of DANKYOU, a game developer in Japan. In 2007, DANKYOU was sold to GREE. GURU FLASHPOINT Game Features ● Original Character Set - "GURU" ● Unique Character Design Because GURU is controlled by the computer, the player can be able to move around freely in a realistic manner even in big rooms. In addition, the player can freely move around the field where the battles take place, which makes the player feel more freedom. Moreover, the movement of this character is also based on physics, and the player can run at high speeds and launch attacks from a large distance. Because of these improvements, GURU is no
