'natch - I've watched a couple of minutes and it seems pretty decent, though I haven't been able to get to the main menu. Is it maybe a glitch? I often see cheaters on xSplit and I'd like to keep that kind of trouble out of my games - both the players and the games. Is it worth downloading or is it just a waste of time? A: The game is an actual series of cut scenes, not a game at all. The game is released on Steam but has never been a store bought game. It is free to play. The cutscenes are not stored in the game but are linked together by a play code and epilogue, much like in media as a "play" version. Any video, picture, or audio link will transfer to the game client as it is activated. How do I play? In steam the only way to play the game is by clicking on a play code. The code can be obtained after playing the game. Steam > Games > www.xsplit.com > GOG Games > www.xsplit.com > Support > Download Play Codes Some of the screenshots may actually have the game running, but this is not a game. The game is a web browser that needs to be actively played. How do I play Gogo? The game can be played over Gogo. To play xSplit Gogo with a single code you must play the game first. Connecting to a game server by Gogo with a single code requires a separate play code and a separate desktop client, which requires an xSplit key. Upgrading and cancelling subscription During a trial period you can upgrade your subscription. Upgrading can be done by accessing the Steam UI, clicking Support, clicking

I have a class: public class FooClass { private int inner1; public int getInner1() { return inner1; } } and then i have a class which extends that class: public class FooSubClass extends FooClass { @Override public int getInner1() { return inner1 + 10; } } Now when i call this function from FooClass class i get a compile error "return type does not match". How can i access the inner class in the main class? Edit: I can't find any answer to this problem in google so please don't suggest adding another question.
