As with any software, Photoshop can be abused — as your minister would say, "Be ye warned" — but Photoshop requires only that you use it the right way. The following sections help you define and define your images appropriately. Choosing the right image format When you shoot digital images, you have the option to create images in TIFF or JPEG. Both TIFF and JPEG are raster-based image formats, which means that both enable you to see through a photo's pixels (the raw data that make up an image). Photoshop supports both TIFF and JPEG but has the capability to use only one or the other. To get the best from Photoshop, be sure that you always start with a 32-bit JPEG image, whether you're shooting on a film or digital camera. 16-bit images will not show up in the image editing process correctly in Photoshop. You get better conversion results for TIFF images when you convert them into TIFF than when you do JPEG compression. Shooting with a film camera doesn't mean you have to stick with film. You can shoot with a digital camera to get the best possible results. As an example, if you shoot Kodak Gold 200 or 250 on a digital camera, you can then capture the image on your computer. You can then scan the image file to create a digital image file using your preferred image editing software. On most digital cameras, you can shoot in TIFF or JPEG or both, or you can shoot in RAW — or just shoot JPEG. If you shoot RAW images on a film camera, be sure to use the Raw Converter to process the image in Photoshop. With a digital camera, you need to do that type of processing in-camera, or with the Camera Raw plug-in. Starting out with a basic knowledge of photo concepts If your image has been shot without any image processing, you should start by looking at the basics: understanding the light source used in the image, looking at the color balance (see Book I, Chapter 4), and making sure that the exposure and color are correct. Setting the white balance Exposing an image correctly is very important when processing a picture in Photoshop. You can't manipulate an image if you don't have a good picture to start with. If the subject or background has a white, neutral shade of color, you can use a technique called white balance. White balance enables you to color-correct your image

Q: Command line parsing and reading from a file I just started to learn command line parsing using powershell. I have a problem with reading and parsing parameters that I send to the script through the command line. My script looks like this:

param( [string]$a = "", [string]$b = "", [string]$c = "", [string]$d = "", [string]$f = "", [string]$g = "", [string]$h = "", [string]$i = "", [string]$j = "", [string]$k = "", [string]$l = "", [string]$m = "", [string]$n = "", [string]$o = "", [string]$p = "", [string]$q = "", [string]$r = "", [string]$s = "", [string]$t = "", [string]$u = "", [string]$v = "", [string]$w = "", [string]$x = "", [string]$y = "", [string]$z = "" ) $ScriptCmd = { param ($a, $b, $c, $d, $f, $g, $h, $i, $j, $k, $l, $m, $n, $o, $p, $q, $r, $s, $t, $u, $v, $w, $x, $y, $z) Suri = New-Object
