The purpose of this study was to investigate the effects of N-acetyl-cysteine (NAC) treatment on fetal developmental parameters in rats after maternal administration of ethanol. Ethanol was administered intraperitoneally (IP) to pregnant rats at a dose level of 5 g/kg body weight once daily from gestation day 6 to 18. On gestation day 18, the fetuses were examined for the following parameters: 1) crown-rump length (CRL) and body weight, 2) exencephalic ratios and the head width/stomatal length ratio, and 3) selected organ weights and the content of vitamin A and carotenoids in the fetuses. When administered to the pregnant rats 30 min before ethanol treatment, NAC at a dose level of 750 mg/kg body weight partially reversed the fetal developmental and nutrient depletion effects induced by ethanol administration. The combination treatment prevented the increases of fetal body weight and amniotic fluid volume induced by ethanol treatment, but did not prevent the declines in fetal CRL, exencephalic ratios, head width/stom 6d1f23a050
