While everyone in the industry was talking about retina devices, and their ability to deliver a better image on the web, Adobe quietly developed an incredible new programming language called WebAssembly and Emscripten to power. We intend to use this opportunity to build a new category of web applications, powered by the latest web technologies, not the oldest. The plan is to leverage the unique code-signing features of the WebAssembly specification and WebAssembly runtime and deliver such powerful applications as Photoshop in the browser. The WebAssembly specification guarantees that WebAssembly programs can run in every major browser without relying on any hoops or compromises. e3d0a04c9c
