I just don’t care anymore, and I do what I feel like.” “I don’t want to hear about it,” she grumbled. “You’re the one with the problem. I don’t know how to go on with my life without you. Please, baby, don’t make this any harder. Just come back home with me and we’ll work this out.” “Maybe if you had a lick of faith in me, you wouldn’t feel the way you do.” She just wasn’t listening. She could only feel the ache in her heart because she was so disappointed. This was what she got for thinking he’d have the strength to leave her on their own. They were soon arguing, and her voice was rising. Where was he, anyway? She started to cry. Why won’t he just come home with me? We need to work this out, and only he can do it. And then the phone rang. She grabbed the phone and looked at the caller ID. “It’s him.” “Hello.” His voice was full of smoke, calm and deadly. “I know who this is. You’ve got no right
